YOUR ABSTRACT HERE. Abstracts should be no more than one page, not including references. If an under-review or published paper has more than one page, the authors need to submit a one-page version of the paper and specify as a footnote[1] the name of the conference at which the original work is published or under review. We strongly recommend the authors revise the "Introduction" section of the original paper and manage to fit within one page. Abstract reviewing will not be blind, so please include all names and affiliations of the authors.

An abstract should summarize the motivation, contributions, methods, and evaluation schemes of the research conducted by the authors. Authors may refer to the following structure:

- Problem and Motivation. What problem does this research tackle? What challenges motivate the research?
- Contributions. What type of novel contributions does the research make (e.g., algorithm, theory, modeling, dataset, evaluation)? List the contributions.

[1]Please specify the name of the conference at which the original work is published or under review.

- Methods. Briefly describe the methods that yield the contributions.
- Evaluation. How are the methods evaluated? Briefly discuss the experimental or theoretical results.
